The effect of roasting and salting on the quality of 15 Thai-cultivated rice varieties was investigated. The rice quality was evaluated by estimating protein and lipid contents, chemical and sensory quality. The salting of cooked rice significantly decreased its total lipid content. Roasting at 120 degrees C for 15 min decreased the protein and lipid content of the cooked rice. Chemical and sensory quality measurements showed that salting and/or roasting were effective in decreasing the amount of salt, MSG and sugar in rice samples. Principal component analysis of rice quality variables showed that the quality of rice is mainly influenced by physicochemical and sensory variables.
